FLORIDA

Beginning in August 2000, the Florida Department of Health received its first annual allocation of $525,000 in recurring general revenue for the program. These same state funds, along with an additional $540,000 in federal BEACH Act grants, were made available for the program in 2004. Local health departments in 34 of the state's 35 coastal counties (Jefferson County has no accessible beaches) received a portion of these funds to monitor an average of nine sites for enterococcus and fecal coliform. The Florida Department of Health posts monitoring results for all 307 beaches on its website (<http://apps3.doh.state.fl.us/>).

In August 2002, the department expanded beach-monitoring frequency from once every two weeks to once a week with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) grant monies. With weekly sampling results available, Florida also began using the steady-state geometric mean enterococcus standard, along with the single sample maximum standard, to determine swimming advisories. In addition to the enterococcus standard, Florida also tests for fecal coliform when determining beachwater safety. In 2003, the Florida Department of Health lowered its fecal coliform standard to 400cfu/100ml from 800cfu/100ml. Weekly sampling, the use of both enterococcus standards, and the lower fecal coliform standard continued through all of 2004.

The Florida Department of Health recommends that swimming advisories be issued when monitoring samples exceed the BEACH Act required geometric mean or single sample maximum standard for enterococcus, and that warnings be issued when state fecal coliform levels are exceeded. There is essentially no difference between an advisory and a warning—the program makes the distinction based simply on the indicator organism used. However, the ultimate decision to issue the advisory or warning lies with the local county health department.

If a sample exceeds the standard, an advisory or warning is usually not issued until a follow-up sample also exceeds the standard. In some cases, the follow-up sample is taken the same day, but in other cases, it may take up to a week before the results of the follow-up sample are known. In the interim, no advisory or warning is issued. Although the Department of Health requires follow-up sampling, the agency suggests that an advisory or warning be issued based on the results of the single sample if no follow-up sample can be taken (if, for example, the testing laboratory is closed for an extended holiday). Beaches were under swimming advisories for 3,345 days in 2004, plus 22 extended advisories lasting from 713 consecutive weeks and 4 permanent advisories lasting more than 13 consecutive weeks.

According to Florida's 2004 305(b) report, 3,126 square miles of estuaries were assessed for primary-contact recreation. Of these, 57 percent (1,769) met the designated use, 29 percent (914) had insufficient data to determine use support, and 14 percent (443) did not support primary-contact recreation. Florida analyzed 3,153 square miles of estuaries for trends in all designated uses between 1994 and 2003. Of these, 9 percent (278) were improving, 3 percent (87) were declining, and 88 percent (2,788) showed no change. Bacteria and mercury are the primary causes of nonattainment of designated uses. Florida coastal waters were assessed for fish consumption uses but not for primary-contact recreation. All 6,758 square miles of coastal waters do not attain water quality standards for fish consumption because of excessive concentrations of mercury in fish tissue.

The 305(b) report also cites the growing concern about the potential public health threat from harmful algal blooms, including red tides and blue-green algae, which are increasing in frequency, duration, and magnitude and may be a significant threat to surface drinking water resources and recreational sites. Harmful algal blooms are typically fueled by excess nutrients, most likely from agricultural runoff and sewage discharges. They may produce toxins that can harm humans through exposure to contaminated fish, skin contact, and even the inhalation of aerosols.

Florida red tides have been particularly problematic in 2005. There were more fish kills and other events, such as abnormal fish appearance or discolored waters, attributed to red tides in the first three months of 2005 than during the same time period in four of the previous five years. In March of this year, the well-publicized die-off of several dozen manatees in southwest Florida was potentially linked to red tides. Preliminary research from scientists working in southwest Florida's Lee County on both red tides and red-drift algae (nontoxic microalgae whose blooms are also triggered by the presence of nutrients in water) suggests that occurrences of such blooms are worsening, are linked to wastewater discharges as well as other nutrient sources, and are initiated near shore, closer to sources of human-made pollution, rather than offshore as previously thought.<sup>1</sup>

Standards and Testing

Indicator Organisms: Enterococcus, fecal coliform.

Standards: According to the EPA's "Water Quality Standards for Coastal and Great Lakes Recreation Waters: Final Rule," Florida did not adopt BEACH Act required standards in 2004: for ocean and bay waters, an enterococcus single sample maximum of 104/100ml and a steady-state geometric mean of 35/100ml.<sup>2</sup>

However, based on discussions with state and local officials from the Healthy Beaches Program, as well as monitoring and advisory data posted on the program's website, Florida uses an enterococcus single sample maximum of 104/100ml and a steady-state geometric mean of 35/100ml, as well as a fecal coliform single sample standard of 400/100ml to determine the health safety of beachwater.<sup>3</sup> In most coastal counties, officials issue an advisory if any one of these standards is exceeded.

In 2002, two counties in Florida reported a preemptive rain standard. The EPA did not collect updated information on local standards for 2004. Pinellas County has a saltwater standard for Maximo and North Shore Beach. Maximo Beach's standard is 0.8 inch within a 24-hour period, while North Shore Beach's standard is 1 inch within a 24-hour period. Okaloosa County has a standard for freshwater that is in effect only when there is hard rain for eight hours or more than 4 inches in two days. Martin County has a preemptive standard based on turbidity. Florida did not report any preemptive rain advisories to the EPA in 2004.

Monitoring

Testing Frequency: Starting in August 2002, 307 sites in 34 coastal counties are monitored once a week as part of the Florida Department of Health Healthy Beaches Program. A list of all 307 beaches by county can be found on the program's website (<http://esetappsdo.doh.state.fl.us/irm00beachwater/default.aspx>). As required under the federal BEACH Act of 2000, coastal states had to report all of their coastal beaches and indicate whether they are monitored. The list of beaches can be found on the EPA's Beach Watch homepage (<http://www.epa.gov/waterscience/beaches/list/list-of-beaches.pdf>).

Cost of Annual Monitoring and Public Notification Program: Florida Healthy Beaches Program received a $537,390 federal BEACH Act grant in 2004, along with an allocation of $525,000 in recurring general revenue from the state.

Closings/Advisories

Florida beach advisory days decreased 16 percent to 3,345 in 2004 from 3,986 in 2003. The greatest decrease in closing/advisory days was in Bay County, where officials attribute the decrease primarily to a 28.5 percent decrease in rainfall. There were no changes in the number of stations monitored, the frequency of monitoring, or the advisory issuance protocol.<sup>5</sup> However, in Broward County, officials report that many of the county's advisories in 2003 were related to an intracoastal site no longer monitored in 2004.<sup>6</sup>

Closing/Advisory Issuance: Advisory or warning decisions are made at the discretion of each county. According to the Florida Healthy Beaches website, if the weekly sample exceeds either of the two instantaneous sample standards, a resample is taken before a public swimming advisory or warning is issued. However, resampling practices are not consistent among all 34 coastal counties. Certain county health departments in Florida have issued an advisory or warning without resample (Bay and Monroe, for example) while other counties have resampled within 24 hours (Miami-Dade, for example), and still others waited until the next weekly sampling cycle (Taylor, for example).

Causes of Closings/Advisories: All beach advisory days in 2004 were due to monitoring that revealed elevated bacteria levels from unknown sources of contamination.
